Starting on July 23, 1967, a massive uprising took place in Detroit against racism, poverty and police brutality.

The Military was sent in to put down the rebellion with at least 43 people being killed.

For anyone who wants to struggle today against the growing poverty, unemployment, homelessness, union busting and continuing racism, it is important to understand our past.

How can we build upon Detroit's long history of progressive movements and union solidarity?

How can we rekindle an activist spirit among the youth?

How can we make history, not just study it?
